RE: AB 181 - Social Media Legislation

Dear Chairman Bobzien:

The Securities Industry and Financial Markets Association (SIFMA)<sup>1</sup> is writing to express its concerns about AB 181, as currently drafted. This legislation would, among other things, prohibit employers from requiring that current employees provide employers with access to their personal social media accounts.

The securities industry has no interest in accessing employee accounts that are used exclusively for personal use. The problem, however, is that many people use the same account for both personal and business activity. According to a 2012 American Century Investments study, nearly nine out of ten financial services professionals have a social media profile or account. Fifty-eight percent of these professionals use social media for business at least several times per week; twenty-seven percent use it for business on a daily basis.<sup>2</sup> Business use includes, among other things, reading and posting commentary, monitoring and sharing relevant news, business promotion and brand building, sharing best practices, and obtaining customer feedback. A “personal” account that is used for business purposes must be treated as a business account.

While AB 181 is well-intentioned, it would, if enacted, conflict with the duty of broker-dealers to supervise, record, and maintain business-related communications as required by both the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (“FINRA”) and by state law. FINRA is the largest independent regulator for all securities firms doing business in the United States and is considered a self-regulatory organization under federal securities laws. To protect investors, FINRA requires, among other things, that securities firms supervise, record and maintain their employees’ business communications – including those disseminated on social media sites. This is spelled out in several different FINRA rules and regulatory notices, including:

- Securities firms must establish procedures for the review of registered representatives’ written and electronic business correspondence. (NASD Rule 3010(d))

- “Firms must adopt policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that their associated persons who participate in social media sites for business purposes are appropriately supervised ....”(FINRA Regulatory Notice 10-6)
- “The content provisions of FINRA’s communications rules apply to interactive electronic communications that the firm or its personnel send through a social media site.” (FINRA Regulatory Notice 10-6)
- A firm’s procedures “must be reasonably designed to ensure that interactive electronic communications do not violate FINRA or SEC rules, including the content requirements of NASD Rule 2210, such as the prohibition on misleading statements or claims and the requirement that communications be fair and balanced.” (Regulatory Notice 11-39)

State securities laws and regulations similarly require broker-dealers and broker-dealer agents to maintain books and records relating to the firm’s business. The North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA), a body comprised of the state securities regulators tasked with protecting investors within their respective jurisdictions, has expressed serious concern that social media bills could conflict with state securities requirements. In a February 14 letter to NCSL Executive Director William Pound<sup>3</sup>, NASAA President and Arkansas Securities Commissioner Heath Abshire states,

“State laws and regulations require broker-dealers, investment advisers, broker-dealer agents and investment adviser representatives to maintain books and records relating to the firm’s business, which can include business communications made or transmitted using social media. To comply with these requirements, broker-dealers and investment advisers must be able to access social media accounts used by employees for business purposes. Legislation under consideration by certain states may prove problematic because, absent an appropriate carve-out, such laws would place broker dealers and investment-advisers in a precarious position where compliance with state privacy laws might cause them to run afoul of their supervisory and record-keeping responsibilities under state and federal securities laws and regulations, and vice versa.”

Prohibiting broker-dealers from supervising business communications on social media accounts also puts customers at risk. Without appropriate monitoring, it will be much harder for firms to detect serious problems. Such problems could include: (1) misleading claims by an employee, such as the promise of an unrealistically high rate of return on investment; (2) fraudulent activity, including insider trading and Ponzi schemes; and (3) inappropriate conduct such as the selling of investment products that are not approved by the firm.

SIFMA therefore respectfully requests that you consider a narrow exemption to AB 181 so that securities firms can continue to comply with state requirements and FINRA regulations. Exemption language from several other states is illustrative. For example, New Jersey legislation<sup>4</sup> (A. 2878) is on its way to the governor with language in Section 7 which reads, "Nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent an employer from complying with the requirements of State or federal statutes, rules or regulations, case law or rules of self-regulatory organizations." Section 1 also defines personal account to exclude accounts used for business purposes.

Similarly, Michigan recently enacted a social media law<sup>5</sup> (Public Act No. 478) which states in Section 5(2), "This act does not prohibit or restrict an employer from complying with a duty to screen employees or applicants prior to hiring or to monitor or retain employee communications that is established under federal law or by a self regulatory organization, as defined in section 3(a) (26) of the securities and exchange act of 1934, 15 USC 78c(a)(26)." This language also works, although we would suggest replacing "federal law" with "state or federal law or regulation" to recognize state requirements in this area.

We respectfully suggest that you amend AB 181 to include similar language.
